What would you do in the following situations?

Scenario 1. During a midterm exam, the instructor leaves the room to get a cup of coffee. As soon as this happens, a student next to you asks you for the answers to three questions by slipping you a piece of paper to write the answers on.

	Provide the answers (0)	Decline the offer (1)	Decline the offer and report the student for cheating (2)
What would you do if you knew the student who asked for the answers, but this student is not your friend?

Scenario 2. A student from your class confides that she or he has a copy of the exam that will be given in any course tomorrow and will share it with you. The exam is worth 25% of your grade.

	Accept the copy of the exam and use it to study (0)	Decline the offer (1)	Decline the offer and report the student for cheating (2)
What would you do if you knew the student providing the exam, but this student is not your friend?

Scenario 3. You are taking a course in which the quizzes and tests are taken electronically (on Moodle). The instructor has made it clear that you should do these tests on your own. Several of the students in the class ask you if you want to participate in group test taking, in which you would share information and take the tests together. The quiz is worth 25% of your grade.

	Accept the offer (0)	Decline the offer (1)	Decline the offer and report the student for cheating (2)
What would you do if you knew the students asking you to participate, but these students are not your friends?
